

DECEMBER 2019

CARE PACKAGE

CONTENTS

CALENDAR

View a week's worth of upcoming Mindful Daily practices

WEEKLY MONTHLY CLASSES

Flyers to be used to promote Applied Programs that are available to you on eM Life.

THEME WEEK BLOG

A blog post that is written to introduce and share practices related to this month's theme week.

MINDFUL MEETING MOMENT

Short form mindfulness practices to prepare your team to be calm, focuesd, and more efficient for your next metting.

PRACTICE GUIDE

The Mindful Daily Practice Guide Volume 3 contains efficcient mindfulness pracrtices that can be used outside of the classroom.

DECEMBER 1-7 WEEKLY CALENDAR

DECEMBER 8-14 WEEKLY CALENDAR

DECEMBER 15-21

WEEKLY CALENDAR

Theme Week:

Embracing Right Now

Open Your Own Gift

What's most alive for you in THIS moment?

17

20

Cherish The Moment

Are you crowding out what you truly want?

15

18

21eM Life week starts on Tuesday

19

DECEMBER 22-28

WEEKLY CALENDAR

Theme Week:

Embracing Right Now

24

26

Personal Development Plan

What helps you combat workplace stress?

27

22

25

DECEMBER 29-31

WEEKLY CALENDAR

29 30

Isn't it satisfying when someone shows genuine interest in your life?

In today's time-starved, bustling world, you may long for these connections, now more than ever.

Although nothing will replace an affirming exchange with another person, one more hallmark of a rich and fulfilling life is to show genuine care and interest toward yourself.

What Is Self-Awareness?

Socrates said: to know thyself is the beginning of wisdom. But what exactly does it mean to know yourself and to have self-awareness? Here are a few examples.

- To know what makes you tick
- To know your triggers, so you can support yourself accordingly
- To know and honor your unique needs
- To know what brings you joy and meaning
- To know which people and resources you can count on for strength and inspiration

On the one hand, self-awareness may sound like a helpful idea, leading you to greater clarity, purpose, and resilience. For example, if you're aware of situations when you're apt to lose your patience — and this is something you aspire to do better — you can come up with helpful ways to support yourself before and/or during the event.

Increase your awareness by taking the on-demand Awareness Of Breathing applied program!

On the other hand, self-awareness may seem like a silly use of your time or energy given your already full plate.

To that end, there are common misconceptions about self-awareness that may lead you to believe it's not worthwhile, maybe even futile, compared to other priorities or responsibilities.

Below, I've outlined four specific misunderstandings of self-awareness and encourage you to think outside the box about what self-awareness is.

4 Misconceptions of Self-Awareness

1. Getting to know myself is boring or uninteresting. Firstly, I've yet to meet a boring human! As a species with a highly evolved brain, we're about as complex and fascinating as they come. Second, on paper, it may seem like getting to know yourself isn't as exciting as, let's say, going for a hike or meeting friends for dinner.

But the cool thing is, knowing more about yourself can add ease and enjoyment to your experience of virtually everything you do. For example, if you know you have a tendency to get anxious in certain social situations, you can mindfully reflect on ways to create a feeling of ease or support.

Maybe you situate yourself next to people who make you feel good and/or plan exit strategies if you wind up next to a person who makes you uncomfortable. In a nutshell, have fun exploring the ways self-awareness can make already meaningful experiences even more meaningful!

2. I'll be forced to dredge up things about my past that I don't like or want to deal with. Bringing curiosity to challenging aspects of your life is only one facet of self-awareness. But there's not a hard and fast rule saying you need to start – or go – here if it's not interesting or comfortable.

I personally think it's better to gain insight about yourself by exploring what brings you pleasure and joy, at least as a starting point. As you become more familiar with satisfying experiences, including where to find them and what they feel like, your baseline of happiness and resilience naturally increases.

In other words, knowing how to orient your life around joy is just as beneficial as knowing how to identify or manage problems.

3. Taking time to get to know myself is selfish. I can see why you might think this, but let's take a closer look. Investing in your health and wellbeing, whether that means setting aside time to journal about your day or attend a Mindful Daily session, is one of the greatest ways to honor your needs and show respect for yourself.

As you prioritize your needs, everyone around you will benefit.

Just think of the last time you were well-nourished and supported, how did it impact the way you looked at – and related to – others? Keep in mind, I'm not suggesting that you focus on yourself all the time! That's the difference between selfawareness and self-absorption.

Build skills on mindfully parenting with our on-demand 7 Days of Mindful Parenting applied program!

It's crucial to take breaks from an internal focus. Making a point to connect to your environment and the people around you is an awesome counterbalance to building self-awareness.

4. Focusing on myself is the best or only way to create positive change. Contrary to the third misconception, there may be a tendency to think the only way to create positive change is to focus on yourself. In spite of the fact that self-awareness (and self-improvement) begins with the word "self," neither is purely intended as a solo endeavor.

Ideally, as you improve your awareness of who you are, including what you need and want, you'll simultaneously become more aware of others' values and needs – and make a point to connect on this level. Along the same lines, recognizing your interdependent nature, a deceptively simple task, is more straightforward when you foster awareness of your greatest hopes and fears in relationships.

Drop into your body and build the skills of awareness by registering for the next Mindful Daily.

In the end, I hope you'll offer yourself the same warmth and curiosity you'd offer a dear friend when it comes to getting to know yourself. It's important to remember, curiosity isn't something you have to go out and learn. Just think about the natural disposition of a child, hungry to understand the way the world works and full of wonder about simple things. This innate curiosity is yours to reclaim and leverage in simple, creative ways that support your growth and evolution.

As Lao Tzu said, the journey of a thousand miles begins with one step. Which step will you take to further your self-awareness and self-understanding? May it be one that excites you!

Written by eM Life teacher Breon Michel

Dealing With Difficult People

Registration Information

Date and Time: December 10th 3:00pm EDT

December 10st 3:00pm EDT December 23rd 12:00pm EDT

Enrollment is Limited.

Sessions fill up quickly. Register now in your company eMindful portal.

Working and living in society entails coming into contact with difficult people from time to time. Learning the art of seeing commonalities instead of differences can help turn an aggressive confrontation into one of greater ease, harmony and understanding. Central to the art of dealing with difficult people is to recognize their humanity. Difficult people have their own fears, worries, joys and sorrows, and when we can see this, we begin to understand that we all have much in common with one another. As Plato phrased it, "Be kind, for everyone you meet is fighting a hard battle." As we learn to perceive our shared humanity, we become less reactive in response to the "difficult person" and more focused on how to handle the difficult situation.

MINDFUL EATING

Mindfulness Skills To Help Beat Holiday Eating Stress (Session 2)

Registration Information

Date and Time:

December 6th 2:00pm EDT December 19th 3:00pm EDT

Enrollment is Limited.

Sessions fill up quickly. Register now in your company eMindful portal.

The focus of this program is to learn and explore strategies and skills based on the principles of "mindfulness" for losing weight, maintaining weight loss, reducing health risks and generally to experience even more joy in your life. For many of us, the holidays are a challenging time of year to stay on track with weight loss goals: more frequent restaurant eating and social eating, special holiday foods and traditions, extra time pressure and stress that come with balancing work and social holiday commitments, and all of this can lead to less time for exercise. These are just a few of the barriers people experience to losing or maintaining weight loss during the holidays. While restaurant and social eating, holiday foods and increased stress can pose a challenge to weight loss, there are numerous mindfulness and behavioral strategies that can support managing stress, a balanced amount of eating, and maintaining mindfulness and other healthy habits that support weight loss.

MINDFUL MEETING MOMENT

Choose your desired length of Mindful Meeting Moments- short form mindfulness practices that can prepare your team to be more present, more focused, and more effective for the meeting ahead. So settle in, straighten your spine, and follow along.

1 MINUTE CLICK TO LISTEN

3 MINUTES CLICK TO LISTEN

CLICK TO LISTEN

5 MINUTES

THE

MINDFUL DAILY

a handy pocket guide to

SLEEP, FINANCIAL STRESS, ANXIETY,

RELATIONSHIPS, PARENTING, WORKPLACE STRESS

A Transformational Practice

SLEEP

Focus attention on the sensations of the body and breath to settle the mind and relax the body. Bring to mind a happy place or a short phrase that brings you calm and ease.

FINANCIAL STRESS

When you feel the urge to make a purchase, pause and take a few breaths.

Ask yourself if this will help you reach your goals and/or if you really need the item.

PARENTING

Approach situations from an attitude of curiosity. Start with a few conscious breaths and ask yourself what the situation would look like through a child's eyes?

WORKPLACE STRESS

Each time you begin a new task, take one minute to bring your full attention to the breath. Notice what this experience is like for you.

ANXIETY

Pause and take 10 conscious breaths. Ask yourself how are you feeling; is what you're thinking, really true? Respond in a way that will best serve you.

RELATIONSHIPS

What does the other person need from you; to be heard, understood, feel like they matter? What do you need?

A Transformational Practice

Establishing a regular mindfulness practice can be transformational in every aspect of your life — ranging from your performance at work, your connections with others, stress, health and wellbeing, and even your spending habits. Mindfulness helps us to be more present more of the time, and to have greater clarity about what's happening in our inner world of thoughts and emotions, and the world outside of us. This visibility into our in-the-moment thinking and feeling gives us the ability to make choices that will move us in the direction of our life dreams, goals and values.

Mindfulness In Daily Life

Mindfulness can be practiced both formally and informally. When you sit down to meditate, we call that the formal practice. The formal practice helps you create a foundation of mindfulness that enables you to bring your mindfulness skills into everyday life activities, like having a conversation, preparing dinner, responding to emails, or even as you go to sleep. This Practice Guide will give you practical tips for integrating both formal and informal mindfulness practices in your life: Sleep, Financial Stress, Relationships, Anxiety, Parenting, and Purpose.

The message on sleep is clear. We need about 7-9 hours of sleep each night to function at our best. But missing out on the amount and quality of sleep needed is common. Whether you have difficulty falling asleep when your head first hits the pillow, or you wake up and can't get back to sleep, mindfulness can help. And it's normal to take up to 30 minutes to fall asleep, so why not spend a few minutes practicing mindfulness to ease into it.

Wind the mind down for sleep

On the nights your mind starts racing the moment your head hits the pillow, try settling the mind and body to create the conditions for a good night's rest.

- Get comfortably into bed, set all distractions aside, and when you're ready close your eyes.
- Thank your mind for working hard today and now it's time for the mind to rest.
- Settle the mind by shifting your attention away from thinking and to the general feeling of your body lying in bed feeling the weight and texture of sheets or covers on your skin, the pressure of your body resting on the mattress, your head on the pillow.
- Starting with your feet and moving up through the body, bring a relaxed attention to the sensations of each part of the body. First noticing the feet touching sheets, the pressure of feet to mattress, warmth or coolness. And then moving attention to the ankles and so on.
- Keep the attention relaxed enough that you can drift off at any time.

Waking up in the middle of the night

While middle of the night wakeups aren't ideal, we can actually make it harder to get back to sleep by engaging in anxious or frustrated thinking. Instead, take a few moments to help your mind and body relax so you can more easily fall back asleep.

Step 1: When you wake up in the middle of the night, do a mindful check-in. What are your thoughts? Your emotions? Are you anxious or frustrated? Is there any tension in your body?

Step 2: Invite your body to release any tension or tightness. Is there a particular place that you feel it? If so, imagine the soothing energy of the breath moving into that area and inviting that part of the body to soften and relax as much as it will.

Step 3: Coordinate your breath with a comforting phrase to help set your mind at ease. On the inhale you can say to yourself, "Breathing in calm and ease". As you exhale say, "Breathing out relaxing more deeply." Use any phrase that's meaningful to you.

Step 4: Even if it takes a while to fall back asleep, this practice will help you feel more peaceful and relaxed while you rest.

Many people have a stressful relationship with their finances. Worries about not having enough and uncertainty about how to manage finances more effectively can lead to overwhelm and avoiding taking stock and making important financial decisions. Practice these mindfulness tips to get clear about your financial goals, your relationship with money, and maybe to even have a little more in the bank.

Prevent buyer's remorse with a mindful pause

We can purchase almost anything with a touch of a button or swipe of a card, impulsively and instantaneously, which doesn't give time to consider whether we truly want the item, or if it serves our financial goals.

- Before you buy, STOP for 1 minute!
- Take a few deeper breaths as you relax your belly. The compulsion to buy can be intense, so breathe your way to being calmer and give yourself a little distance to any feelings of anticipation or urgency to buy.
- Observe what's compelling you to make this purchase. What are your thoughts? What's your mood? Are you hoping this will bring you happiness?
- Will this purchase bring you closer to what you truly want and need? Will it cause you more financial stress? Will you be just as happy, fulfilled and cared for without the purchase?
- Proceed As you move forward to making or not making the purchase, do so consciously, with clarity and alignment to your longer-term financial goals.

Anxiety is a natural emotion that helps us predict what might go terribly wrong so we can avoid those situations. But anxiety creates havoc when we develop a habit of overestimating the risk of things that may not even happen in the future, and underestimate our ability to handle them. It's not possible to completely get rid of anxiety, nor would that be desirable for our safety. But mindfulness can help us to develop a healthy relationship to anxiety.

Practice these steps to remain steady and resourceful, instead of getting carried away by anxious thoughts and feelings.

Count

Give your mind a break from anxious thoughts by counting your next 10 breaths. This will help your mind and body calm down, putting you in a better position to respond effectively.

Check in

Check in with what's really happening right now. Are you ok in this moment? Are you getting caught up in worries that may never come true? What are the actual facts of the situation? Is it possible you're over-estimating the risks? What do you know about your ability to handle whatever does happen?

Choose

Choose a response that truly serves you, and doesn't make anxious thoughts and feelings worse. Based on the facts of the situation and your resourcefulness, how can you respond to anxious thoughts and feelings more effectively now?

Having good relationships is one of, if not the, biggest predictor of happiness and health. But, successful relationships take work. Mindfulness can help us strengthen our personal and professional relationships by developing greater empathy and becoming more interested in understanding others instead of overly-focusing on being understood.

It Takes Two to Tango

When you get caught up in the blame game, you can actually undermine your ability to resolve the situation because it prevents productive problem-solving. When you find yourself blaming, give this mindfulness empathy practice a try.

- Drop the story about how the other person is to blame.
- Explore other possibilities for perceiving the situation just for a moment.
 What might the situation look like from the other person's vantage point?
 What might they be feeling?
- Now, become curious about what's underneath your reaction of blame. Are you feeling unappreciated, hurt or betrayed? Become aware of your feelings anxious, angry, sad...

- With your broader awareness, what's most important for creating the conditions for health and happiness in this relationship moving forward?

I See What You Mean

Not feeling truly understood can easily create relationship tension and disconnection. If you're desiring greater understanding from others, start by understanding others with this mindful listening practice.

- Set an intention to be deeply curious about the person you're communicating with, and to not share your own perspectives or needs for the next few minutes.
- Pause for a few seconds to become present before directing your openness and curiosity toward the other person.
- Ask the other person something that you'd like to understand about them.
 This could be something as simple as what the best part of their day has been, or something deeper like how they are feeling about a point of tension in your relationship.
- Just listen with the intention to truly understand them, letting go of any need to share your own experience for now.
- Notice what it's like to give yourself permission to be interested and open to the other person, without trying to change the other person or be understood.

Parents often say that their children are wonderful mindfulness teachers. They remind us about the joy of childlike curiosity, slowing down, and being fully present with the ones we love. And they also can push our buttons and send us into an emotional tailspin. Mindfulness can help you be more present, patient, and resilient so you experience more joyful parenting.

Childlike Curiosity

Children are naturally curious, and inclined to ask why and explore as they push boundaries to see what will happen. As adults, we can lose our curiosity by assuming we already know what a person, situation, or experience is like – resulting in our being less present in everyday moments.

Experience more connection and joy by spending a few minutes bringing a childlike curiosity to an everyday situation. This could be something you do alone, like brushing your teeth. Or it could be something you do with your child, like eating dinner. Imagine you're experiencing this for the first time.
Ask yourself these questions and notice the impact of curiosity.

What's it like?

What's interesting about this experience?

What are you becoming aware of that you haven't noticed before?

How is it to be fully present and interested in this moment?

How is your curiosity influencing your experience?

Whether you're experiencing more connection or joy, or noticing you'd rather be doing something else, take note of the value of curiosity in your day.

Patience

It takes children more time to get dressed, eat breakfast, walk to the car.... If we haven't budgeted enough time for them to do things, it's easy to see them as the reason we're running late and feeling stressed. But it may be more accurate to say that we're the reason they are feeling rushed and stressed. The next time you want your child to move faster, support each other with patience!

How could slowing down right now help you move faster, or accept the moment just as it is, with greater ease and joy?

- Give yourself permission to slow your mind and body down.
- Notice how impatience feels in your body (tension, clenching, heart racing) and your mind (worries about being late, wishing something would or wouldn't happen).
- Invite any tension to release by taking a few deeper breaths.
- Ask yourself if your impatience is really helping you or your child right now?
 Will your impatience help either of you to feel more calm, competent, or connected?

WORKPLACE STRESS

When it comes to success in our personal and professional lives, we only have so much we can do, be and give. And sometimes our pursuit of success causes stress and anxiety. Mindfulness can help us diffuse workplace stress with an attitude of gratitude, and by being more connected to our purpose for the work we do.

Clarify Your Purpose

Purpose is a way of living, not an end goal. It can be about the way you relate to others, the qualities you want to embody, and the daily work of your life. Take a few moments before jumping into work to connect to your purpose to feel more inspired, creative, resourceful and resilient in your work.

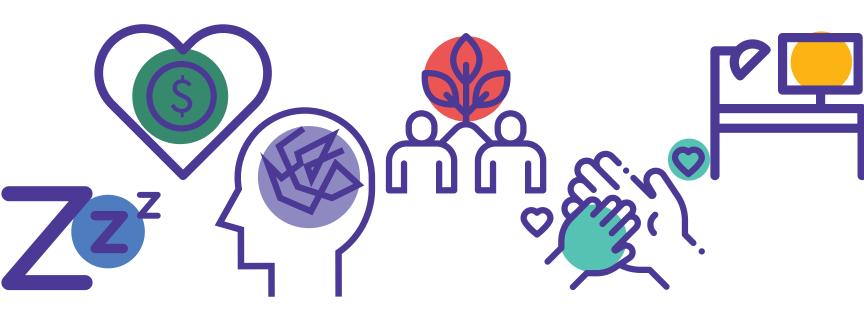

- Pause the doing and unbusy your mind by tuning into your body. Notice your energy, temperature, restlessness or stillness...
- Purpose is often experienced as a deeper level of knowing, or wisdom that can more easily be connected to as you settle the mind and body. Continue to rest your awareness in the body for a few moments.
- When you're ready, ask yourself: What is meaningful to you? What are the values you want to bring into the world? What is the difference you want to make or the way you want to be with others in the world? What seems clear, or is perhaps emerging, about your purpose in this moment?
- Notice how becoming more clear and connected to a sense of purpose influences your experience of the workday.

Gratitude Practice

Cultivating gratitude has been shown to help overcome the brain's tendency to focus on the negative, and under appreciate the positive aspects of our day, work, and life. Gratitude helps us rebalance our perspective by intentionally appreciating where we work, who we work with, and the work we get to do. Give yourself this daily gratitude challenge and notice how it shifts your perspective.

- Take a few minutes each day to reflect on one or two things you are grateful about.
- If you're having a hard time thinking of things you're grateful for, look for the smaller and simpler things. You might feel grateful when someone reminds you of a resource you could use to make your job easier, or for bringing you a cup of coffee to your morning meeting.
- Spend about 1 minute taking in the experience of being grateful for each thing, experience or person that you're feeling grateful for.
- Notice how it feels as you recall what you're grateful for and how gratitude influences your day.

www.eMindful.com